Diplomacy as a Profession Remarks to the American Foreign Service Association. Ambassador Chas W. Freeman, Jr., USFS (Ret.) The Foreign Service Club, Washington, DC, 11 January 1995. I am going to talk today about diplomacy as a profession. Is it a profession? Should it be a profession? As stewards of their people's interests and reputations in foreign lands, diplomats must evidence, first, concern about their compatriots and a dedication to serving them; second, understanding of commerce and finance; third, an appreciation of the essentials of military science; and fourth, knowledge of diplomatic practices and international law.
