Germany had four cavalry divisions in World War Two. The Soviets had 13. And in 1941, Life magazine reported that the U.S. Army was supplying itself with 20,000 horses. In fact, according to the magazine, it was the biggest order for horses the army had placed since the Civil War. On the battlefield, cavalry made a number of contributions during World War Two. In January of 1942, the U.S. 26th Cavalry attacked Japanese infantry on the Bataan Peninsula. Later, the same unit even managed to hold off enemy tanks. American mounted units were not used elsewhere during the war, but George Patton sup The thing about World War I was that both sides were using modern weaponry that was not well understood by the commanders, so they used the strategies that had proven themselves effective in prior conflicts only to have weapons like machine guns tear advancing infantry or cavalry to pieces. This is why the western front turned in trench warfare. World War II saw tanks assume a dominant role in warfare, capable of tearing through the enemy lines if left unchecked. To combat the threat posed by these armoured behemoths the United States developed the M1 Anti-Tank Rocket Launcher, better known as the Bazooka. First employed in combat during 1942, the weapon required a great deal of skill and courage to use effectively. In conjunction with the lightly armed utility version, the M20, it was the staple of the army's cavalry squadrons for use in reconnaissance and scouting. First entering combat in Italy in 1943, it was widely used throughout the campaign in northwest Europe, though its off-road performance was found to be wanting.

Although World War II was started by Nazi Germany in their attempt to conquer Europe, it turned into the largest and the bloodiest war in world history, responsible for the deaths of an estimated 40 to 70 million people, many of whom were civilians. World War II included the attempted genocide of the Jewish people during the Holocaust and the first use of an atomic weapon during a war. Dates: 1939 - 1945. Also Known As: WWII, Second World War. Appeasement Following World War I. After the devastation and destruction caused by World War I, the world was tired of war and was willing to do almost anything to avoid another. The modern view of World War II is one of huge armoured formations dealing out death and destruction on all sides whilst being impervious to incoming fire. Cavalry, at least those in the traditional sense (not tank units retaining traditional regiment names) who ride into battle on horses, seem to be as out of place on a modern battlefield as would be a flintlock musket. But is this really the case? SS Cavalry in Russia 1941. When we look at the early stages of World War I and in particular at the cavalry actions of 1914, we see cavalry taking serious casualties from machine gun fire and being
