Disputation XV, which deals with the formal principle of the nature of material substances, that is, their substantial form, is central to Suarez's presentation of Aristotelian realism. In the Disputation Suarez defended the view, contrary to both dualism and materialism, that material objects are constituted by two co-principles, primary matter and substantial form. The two translators, Jeremiah Reedy and John Kronen, have produced a clear and readable translation of this Disputation central to Suarezian metaphysics. In his introduction and notes to the translation Kronen clearly explain
