DOCUMENTS

If you plan to use the Internet to find documents, you should check that the site is reliable and authoritative; in general, those sites affiliated with a known college or university or library are best; the bibliographies within many recent textbooks also include web sites. Here are 2 reliable sites: library.byu.edu/~rdh/eurodocs/ offers a thorough collection of primary sources organized by nation; perhaps the best resource for primary sources related to European history is www.fordham.edu/halsall/mod/modsbook.html

Reference and Bibliography is an important part of any project under study because it helps in acknowledging other's work and also help the readers in finding the original sources of information. It not only prevents plagiarism but also indicates that the writer has done good research on the subject by using a variety of sources to gain information. Read out the article to know the differences between reference and bibliography. Content: Reference Vs Bibliography. Comparison Chart. Definition. Reference lists list all the sources cited in a document. Bibliographies contain all sources, whether they have been cited directly or not. Reference list vs. bibliography. Reference lists (in MLA style this is called Works cited) contain a complete list of all the sources (books, journal articles, websites, etc.) that you have cited directly in a document. That means that if there are in-text citations for a source there is a reference list entry, and vice versa. How does a "List of References" differ from a "Bibliography"? Your assignments will usually include a "List of References" this term is used for a list of sources that only includes those items you cite in your writing. What about citing? What is that? In your assignment, you will usually need to provide a citation in the text of your assignment when you are referring to evidence from one of your sources (references).

2. Reference lists/ bibliographies. When using the 'author, date' system, the brief references included in the text must be followed up with full publication details, usually as an alphabetical reference list or bibliography at the end of your piece of work. The examples given below are used to indicate the main principles. Book references. How does a "List of References" differ from a "Bibliography"? Your assignments will usually include a "List of References" - this term is used for a list of sources that only includes those items you cite in your writing. What about citing? What is that?
