While investigating intellectual property theft, the FBI focuses on the theft of trade secrets and infringements on products that can impact consumers' health and safety. To accomplish this goal, the IPR Center brings together multiple federal agencies along with Interpol, Europol and the governments of Canada and Mexico in a task force setting. This task force structure enables the NIPRCC to effectively leverage the resources, skills, and authorities of each partner and provide a comprehensive response to IP theft. For more information, visit the National Intellectual Property Rights Coordination Center website. Initiatives and Operations. Piracy is generally classified as a type of theft. However, copyright infringement is a type of piracy and no theft is committed according to the law. Copyright infringement means that an individual has illegally utilized intellectual property but has not prevented the owner from having access, which would then constitute theft. However, most courts will not consider it theft since the money was not yet in the hands of the person that was actually entitled to it. Piracy is traditionally associated with maritime piracy, in which pirates looted the booty off of ships that passed by during their travels to ports. Often, the pirates would strategically board the ship and forcefully gain control of crew members and passengers. Before long, piracy and kidnapping became one of the most profitable activities available on a coast ravaged by overfishing and pollution. By 2008, piracy was a serious enough problem that intervention by NATO, the EU, and others became necessary to protect shipping. Related Coverage. Damage to the environment and exploitation by foreign fishing vessels will create a need for locals to fill the power vacuum to protect their own coasts. In turn, these local militias become prone to piracy and kidnapping to survive in an economy plagued, in part, by overfishing. When groups such as NATO get aggressive about stopping pirates but do little to nothing about illegal fishing, it only reinforces the notion among locals that they must protect their own coasts against foreign exploitation.
